

TERRACORPS

TerraCorps is an innovative national service program helping communities conserve and secure land for the health and well-being of people and nature. Using the AmeriCorps national service model, TerraCorps prepares and mobilizes emerging leaders to help strengthen community-based nonprofits working to meet these goals.

This year's TerraCorps program will support thirty-six full-time AmeriCorps members, serving in one of five positions: Land Stewardship Coordinator (LSC), Regional Collaboration Coordinator (RCC), Community Engagement Coordinator (CEC), Youth Education Coordinator (YEC), or Urban Agriculture Coordinator (UAC). Members will serve in full-time, 11-month terms (August 27th, 2018-July 26th, 2019) in which they complete at least 1700 hours of service with one of our partner organizations. Members receive a living allowance, education award, and additional AmeriCorps benefits (see full list at end of announcement).

North County Land Trust will host a Community Engagement/Youth Education Coordinator for the 2018-19 service year. Information about all TerraCorps positions is available at terracorps.org.

North County Land Trust is a non-profit, regional land conservation organization founded in 1992 to protect, preserve and promote the natural resources of north central Massachusetts. NCLT serves 14 communities and focuses on identifying natural resources, working lands, and landscapes whose conservation is of the highest priority; conserving land in perpetuity for future generations; and engaging communities to understand and appreciate their natural environment and the importance of conservation. Our office is located on conservation land owned by the Trustees of Reservations in Leominster, MA.

A service member at North County Land Trust will be serving in a blended capacity, with 50% of time in a Community Engagement role, and 50% of time spent in a Youth Education role.

Community Engagement Coordinators (CEC) build the long-term capacity of their service sites by developing culturally inclusive systems, programing, partnerships, and events. By collaborating with community groups, CEC's demonstrate how the sustainable use and conservation of land can help address community needs related to education, public health, economic development, neighborhood revitalization, homelessness, poverty, hunger, and cultural decline. CECs may partner with homeless shelters or food pantries to build community gardens; hospitals to build wellness gardens and walking paths, neighborhood groups to revitalize urban parks and greenways; farmers markets to increase community access to locally grown food; disability groups to create wheelchair accessible outings; youth and adult groups to inspire artistic expression; public health programs to support recovery; etc. By engaging with diverse peoples and collaborating with community partners, CEC's build bridges that reinforce the connection between land and a sustainable social, economic, and environmental future for all people.

Youth Education Coordinators (YEC) build the long-term capacity of their service site by engaging youth in service learning, experiential education, and inquiry-based science and nature learning projects. They collaborate with schools, libraries, and youth groups on projects that connect young people to the natural world, improve science literacy, and encourage healthy lifestyles. YECs may help their service site to engage with educators and volunteers to guide youth in environmental inquiry and discovery, school and community garden projects, urban tree stewardship projects, urban pocket park projects, and "green jobs" training and internship programs. By serving with youth in an outdoor learning environment, they reinforce the connection between people, nature, and community and foster an inclusive land stewardship ethic in future generations.

TerraCorps members engage with their supervisors to develop and carry out three or more capacity building projects over the course of the service year. Some of these projects will involve recruiting, training, and/or managing community volunteers. North County Land Trust has proposed the following potential project for their Community Engagement/ Youth Education Coordinator:

1. Improve upon and expand the successful outreach and education programs established by the previous TerraCorps members. These projects include: teaching natural science explorations within Longsjo Middle school in Fitchburg, weekly visits with the Boy and Girls Club in Gardner, and community science fair opportunities throughout the region.
2. Expand outings and education programs by cultivating relationships with local organizations, urban neighborhoods, and community groups and implementing programs that engage community members in the natural world.
3. Collaborate with NCLT staff and other TerraCorps members within the region to think strategically about engaging citizens in our communities and responding to their unique needs.

4. Develop systems and frameworks to streamline and expand capacity for North County Land Trust’s communications and outreach efforts.
5. Expand and implement creative and engaging ways in which we can bring awareness of North County Land Trust and our core advocacy issues (environmental awareness, land conservation, appropriate development, human wellness, universal access and connection to nature) to new constituents.

Development of these and other projects will occur during the first two months of service and consider the member’s interests and skills.
